Seven years into the ADAPT project, the platform is widely used throughout the world in managing and translating field operations data. A lot has changed in seven years, however. One example is the growth of available data sources beyond logged yield, planting and application data. Another is the prevalence of cloud computing and its effects: the rise of Linux usage in commercial settings and the standardization of service-oriented, language-independent APIs. Against this backdrop, ADAPT's focus as an offline Windows/C# toolkit for translating proprietary machine data into a common format needs a refresh. Industry contributors have already started expanding on ADAPT, but there is still a lot to do. Join us for a discussion of the state of agriculture data today, where ADAPT needs work, and how we can work together to continue building on the platform. Facilitated by: Chair Dan Danford and Co-Chairs Kelly Nelson and Stuart Rhea	Quick Connect Round 8 Register to participate!
